Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 356 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.7in. Excerpt from The English Woman: Studies in Her Psychic Evolution Science and psychic evolution - Darwin demonstrates organic evolution - Spencer determines the laws of psychic change - The optimist conception - May we hope for the conscious psychic evolution of individuals - Mans ideal of improvement - Psychology and the new conception of man - Science and religion - Survival and annihilation. Briefly reviewing the social and intellectual tendencies of the last century in its earlier years, we see the European peoples but just emerging, socially speaking, from the darkness of medieval administrations. We see great masses of human beings sad, weary, inert, living without any apparent expectation of material or mental improvement. No animating ray of human thought seemed to enlighten them. From the philosophic point of view thought was only beginning to break through the rigid limitations imposed by the Church. But it was already in process of evolution, though still very slowly, towards a rational, scientific analysis of the universe. Modern Science was still in its infancy. Philosophic and scientific thought belonged exclusively to a few exceptional minds, therefore it did not readily reach the consciousness of the masses.
