

Necessary Candor: Standing Up to Racial Discrimination and Bullying in the Workplace (Paperback)

By John D Bumphus Jr

Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Every work day, literally millions of black people in America feel as if they are being racially marginalized, disregarded or disenfranchised while on the job and at work by their white employers and co-workers. The general and socially accepted option of action for these black people is to learn to go along to get along ; that is, to keep working on your job, unless things happen to just get too crazy. Too crazy, you ask? Yes, each and every black American has, and always holds onto, their own individual perception, idea and understanding about how much, is too much, for any person to be asked to put up with, just in order to keep your job. Of course and rightly, filing an in-house complaint of racial discrimination is the most expedient and accepted form of resolving any issues which may come into dispute. Most companies are adequately equipped with Human Resource Departments designed to observe and monitor these occurrences, so as to effectively adapt, and change their policies and practices when necessary, in a timely enough manner to avoid...
