Page Publishing, Inc., United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .In the 1930s, hard-working men kept the country alive, and the little town of Black Eye depended on one lumber mill to keep its community on its feet. Due to the lack of lumber orders, several times the mill came close to being shut down, but it seemed like each time there was no relief in sight, the mill would pick up an order and start sawing again. When malaria hits Black Eye, Dr. Fred Baker runs out of antibiotics and he is getting run down himself. He phones an old friend in Minneapolis, several hundred miles away, and pleads for help. But pneumonia had plagued the big city, and antibiotics and help were in short supply. Dr. Baker convinces his friend that the townspeople will die if they don't receive help, and the doctor's friend makes arrangements for medicine and a nurse to go to Black Eye-if someone comes to pick them up. Already dead on his feet from a hard day at the mill, Jim Borden agrees to make the trip. Jim's little girl has pneumonia, and he and his wife, Cathy, must take her to the hospital in Minneapolis. They borrow a little Chevy coupe and drive through freezing rain to reach the hospital. On the way, at the bottom of the hill, the car can't get enough traction to make the climb. Tired and exhausted, Jim dozes off for a few minutes and falls into a short, deep sleep. When he opens his eyes, he sees a faded figure of a team of horses in full harness hooked to the front of the coupe. Jim puts the car in low gear and let...
