Not illustrated. 1886 Excerpt: . . . or ordinances for cities; but want the moral effect of such a resolution as that, to which I suppose every gentleman here assents. It is only safe when you use fire hydrants exclusively for fire purposes. The Vice-president: --With us I have one difficulty. Our contract with the city is, that the city shall use fire hydrants at so much per annum for each hydrant, for the use of the fire department in extinguishing fires. And right here comes this difficulty: Under the pretense of practice, the fire department connect their hose and sprinkle every street near, thereby cutting off considerable revenue. If we supply the sprinkling carts by meter, we sell them water at so much a thousand gallon, but when the fire department gets out of practice, and sprinkles the streets, we are deprived of that. I should like very much to have a...
