Excerpt from A Plea for Peace: Delivered Before Fifteen Thousand Men and Women at the Coliseum, Chicago, November 29th, 1915 In all these warring countries there is a very strong desire for peace. But each one is convinced that its utter destruction is the object of this war, and that by fighting alone can its national life be saved. And this frame of mind is due largely if not entirely to those perversely distracting phrases we have been considering. If each country were apprised definitely and clearly of the territory or money which its rulers were fighting to obtain, its conscience would be quick to revolt from anything like a scheme of wanton injury or spoliation. If one side declined to disclose its purposes, even though requested to state them by the President, no action by this country would be necessary or advisable. Refusal by any belligerent to answer such an inquiry could be left with perfect safety to the conscience of mankind.
