Emaciation is also a pronounced symptom under hydrastis and it is due not alone to the debility due to the phthisis, but it refers more particularly to the malnutrition following the prolonged indigestion. The great object in the treatment of tuberculosis is to obtain nutrition and we cannot gain this except from the most perfect action of the alimentary canal; hence hydrastis is of much value in this respect. More than this we must remember that hydrastis has a peculiar relation to hemorrhages, hence its action must have some effect when the erosion of tissue takes place. This man was subject to hemorrhages, but he has experienced none since he has been under this remedy. We present this case not alone for the peculiarity of the pathologic findings but for the sake of our study of hydrastis in such cases. EXOPHTHALMIC GOITRE. It is rare that we find a case of this kind in a man; it is far more uncommon to see a case with such classic symptoms as in this instance. This man, twenty-four years of age, first came to my clinic two years ago. At that time he was so repulsive that it was revolting to look at him; the exophthalmos was so extreme that the eyes almost protruded from their sockets and the interior chambers had already ruptured. The goitre was the largest I ever saw in a case of this kind and the tachycardia was manifest; the pulse regularly ran as...
