Excerpt from The Extermination of Tuberculosis: Preservation of Milk and Raising of Calves; Lecture Delivered March 16, 1904, at the Agricultural Exhibition, at Bonn Gentlemen - In my former lectures I have often emphasized. In accordance with Koch - although for different reasons - that I do not consider meat which has passed the control of the health department, butter and cheese, dangerous to man, even if a few tubercle bacilli should be contained in this food, because meat, butter and cheese are food for adults. The healthy adult possesses in the mucous membrane of the intestines a protective contrivance which suffices to destroy such small doses of tubercular virus. As far as healthy grown people are concerned, I am therefore of the opinion, that Ostertag's hygienic demands for the prevention of infection threatening from tuberculous cattle are perfectly satisfactory. However, if grown people prefer drinking boiled milk to raw milk, this is perfectly rational, since cooking prepares the milk for digestion. I am even inclined to believe that boiled milk is more easily digested by grown people, than raw milk. But this is not the case with newborn infants because of the absence of the gastric juice in stomach and intestines. In mother's milk we find small corpuscles consisting of genuine and unchanged albumin. These corpuscles enter the blood circulation as unchanged albumin. The organ to utilize the boiled and peptonized albumin for the formation of blood is not quite developed in the newborn.
