Shepherd-Walwyn (Publishers) Ltd, United Kingdom, 2006. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Modern economics has deliberately divorced itself from all moral and ethical considerations in the belief that it needs to be a value-free science. In schools and universities students are taught that what matters is maximising profits and cutting costs - any other considerations are irrelevant to them as economists. This is the philosophy which guides multinationals, governments and international institutions like the World Bank and the IMF. It is a matter of hard choices. Relief of poverty is charitable, a noble ideal, but has nothing to do with economics. In the year in which the campaign to Make Poverty History was launched, and in which Tony Blair and Gordon Brown were trying persuade the G7 to reduce the debt burden on developing countries, an economist, Dr Kamran Mofid, and a theologian, Rev Marcus Braybrooke, joined in a dialogue to consider how economics and theology could be brought together again - for they have not always been divorced. Dr Mofid points out that before Adam Smith, who is generally regarded as the father of modern economics, had written his famous book The Wealth of Nations, he had been professor of Moral Philosophy at Glasgow University and had written The Theory of Moral Sentiments. Before that, St Thomas Aquinas, Aristotle and Plato considered social issues in a moral context. Marcus Braybrooke recognises that the thought of religion interfering with economic and political life will concern those afraid of the influence of extremists in the world of Islam or of conservative evangelicals in the USA . But he points out that if there is no concept of truth, business agreements become impossible - the presence of lawyers at every negotiation shows how trust has been undermined. Together they...
